

What Is ICL?

The Institute for Continued Learning (ICL) is a program of classes and activities for lifelong learners. Membership consists primarily of retired and semi-retired persons.

ICL is patterned after hundreds of similar centers around the country for continued learning in a college environment. ICL has functioned under a charter from Dixie State College of Utah (DSC) since 1979 and is an official on-campus organization. It is governed by a council of volunteers composed of elected members.

Classes are led by volunteers, either retired professionals who have expertise in their subjects or individuals who have skills and interests that they are willing to share. While most of the classes are in Dixie State College classrooms, some of the classes are in field-trip format. ICL classes are offered from mid-September through mid-April. There are no tests, grades, or required attendance. However, class assignments may be required in some classes.

Copies of the ICL Charter, Constitution and By-Laws, and ICL's policies and procedures are contained in the Member Handbook which is provided to all members each year.
